Dear Mr. Reifsnyder,

Global warming is a serious threat to the well-being of our country and the planet. Fortunately, there is something that can be done about it, if we act now.

As our representative to the UNFCCC, you are obliged to represent the best interests of our country and its people in your negotiations for the next international agreement on global warming. At that meeting in Montreal in November, every country will be looking to you and the US for leadership in laying out a plan for future reductions in greenhouse gases. It is not too late for the US to indicate its willingness to ratify the Kyoto Protocol now and begin negotiating to design a post-Kyoto agreement that will ensure that we leave a healthy and vibrant planet to future generations. Thank you.
